Thomas V. Barbuti, who was convicted of perjury, was sentenced to from five to ten years.

from five to ten years.

William Hoffman, convicted of having received stolen automobiles, got a sentence of from one to five years.

Salvatore Salaerno, who also was convicted of having received stolen automobiles, received a sentence of from one to five years.

Merin L. Dickerson, who confessed to perjury, received the suspended sentence.

Two other prisoners, Aubrey Pettit, ex-Superintendent of County Buildings, and Carman Plant, former Nassau County Detective, were called to the bar but were remanded for sentence.

sentences took them unemotionally. The court talked to each of them. To Harvey he said:

"Harvey he said:

"Harvey, you are one of those combinations of humanity that have always existed. You have a good side and lots of good people have told me the things that you have a good side. But you are guilty of a very serious crime, and you know that. I cannot let your good side stand in the way of my doing my duty. I understand you have not much money. If you had I would impose a heavy fine upon yo., for your offense deserves a fine. In that way the county might be compensated for the costs of the trails. You have made no attempt to aid the people and I can't shut my eyes to such things."

O'Neill, who is now serving a seven and a half year term in prison, was in court, brought there, as Justice Cropsey put it, to see what happened to the others.

When Barbuti was asked if he had anything to say before sentence was passed he said: "I still maintain I am innecent of the crime of which I have been convicted, and now I seek justice and not mercy at your hends." Court Charges Perjury

Being early, very early in the morning, it was cool, and Bowser the Hound was thoroughly enjoying himself as with his wonderful nose to the ground he followed Reddy Fox. Never had he had a better trail to follow. The ground was damp, for there had been a heavy dew in the night, and the scent lay strong. It was easy to follow, and in the joy of the chase Bowser forgot everything eiger. His great voice rang out steadily, for it is his way to bay on the track of a Fox.

he continues to leave a trail like this I won't give him a chance to rest. I'll run him off his feet."

Across the Old Pasture to the upper edge, then over into the Green Forest, ran Reddy Fox with Bowser only a little way behind. Through the Green Forest to the Laughing Brook they ran. "Ha," thought Bowser. "He is going to try his old trick of breaking the trail by running in the water. That will give him a chance to rest. But it won't do him any good. I know all about that trick. He'll have to leave the water somewhere, and if I don't find his trail on one bank I'll find it on the other."

But to Bowser's surprise Reddy did not take to the water. He kept along the bank for some distance and his scent lay stronger than ever there, for the dampness held it. Bowser knew by the smell that Reddy was only a short distance ahead of him, a very short distance ahead of him, a very short distance ahead of him, a very short distance. "It is queer he doesn't try that water trick," thought Bowser. "It must be that am so close to him that he doesn't dare stop to try tricks. Ha, he is heading back for the Old Pasture. He is getting tired. He'll take to his hole there, and then I may be able to dig him out. I feel it in my bones that this time I am going to catch Reddy Fox."

Sure enough the trail led back to the Old Pasture. But it didn't lead to Reddy's home. Instead it wound in and out along the many cowpaths. He twisted and turned and crossed and recrossed, but always the scent lay strong, and Bowser had no trouble at all in following it. Not once was he puzzled. Not once did Reddy try any of his many tricks for mixing up his trail. All Bowser had to do was to keen his wonder. Clever Pair."

He didn't see Reddy Fox standing from a big rock off to one side and sing the watched Bowser tar past headed straight back to the Green Forest. It would be cooler there.
